Abstract

The study of R<sub>2</sub>BaCuO<sub>5</sub> materials has received attention for its diverse magnetoelectric (ME) coupling effect which varies with R<sub>3+</sub> ions. To understand the origin of the variation of ME coupling with different R<sub>3+</sub> ions we aim to do a detailed investigation on R<sub>2</sub>-xR'<sub>x</sub>BaCuO<sub>5</sub> (R, R'=Gd, Dy) compounds by changing the doping percentages of R'. Synchrotron diffraction studies will help us to understand the origin of the ME effect in R<sub>2</sub>-xR'<sub>x</sub>BaCuO<sub>5</sub> (R, R'=Gd, Dy) compounds from a structural point of view.

Proposal Title	Structural tuning in relaxor multiferroic system $Ba_2LnTi_2Nb_3O_{15}$ ( $Ln=La, Nd$ )
Proposal Abstract ( min 30 characters ) max 3000 characters	The coupling between two ferroic properties in a multiferroic compound makes it promising for various technological applications. For technological aspects, it is highly desirable to develop multiferroic materials with high-temperature ferroic orderings. It is observed that by increasing the structural and chemical diversity in multiferroic systems one can modify the ferroic ordering temperatures and coupling between the ferroic properties. This type of modification can give an alternative way to design technologically promising multiferroic materials. So, the understanding of the origin of multiferroic orders and the coupling between them are vital issues in this field. In this context, the new tetragonal tungsten bronze (TTB) oxides <math>Ba_2LnTi_2Nb_3O_{15}</math> (<math>Ln=La, Nd</math>) of our interest are one of the promising multiferroic materials. <math>Ba_2LaTi_2Nb_3O_{15}</math> exhibits ferroelectric relaxor behavior near 200 K. Our experimental data indicates that the nature of relaxor ferroelectric (209 K - 224 K) is quite complex from the normal ferroelectric. A detailed structural investigation over a broad range of temperatures for <math>Ba_2LaTi_2Nb_3O_{15}</math> is needed to understand the microscopic mechanism behind the relaxor ferroelectric property. Moreover, <math>Ba_2NdTi_2Nb_3O_{15}</math> shows a normal ferroelectric order (<math>T_C=389</math> K) and <math>Ba_2La_{0.5}Nd_{0.5}Ti_2Nb_3O_{15}</math> demonstrates both relaxor and normal ferroelectric properties (<math>T_C=274</math> K). This type of change from relaxor to normal ferroelectric behavior by changing the doping percentage of Nd is very much interesting. From our experimental studies, it is also evident that by increasing the Nd doping percentage in the La site of <math>Ba_2LaTi_2Nb_3O_{15}</math> we can achieve a normal ferroelectric ordering near room temperature. The detailed structural investigation of these materials will help us to find out the actual origin of such a type of change in ferroelectric behavior. It will be also helpful to investigate the mechanism behind the increasing ferroelectric ordering temperature. We hope that our detailed synchrotron study will help to understand the puzzling microscopic mechanism that induces and control the ferroelectric properties in these materials.

Assigned beamline	X-RAY DIFFRACTION

Assigned application cat.	Normal
Proposal quarter	middle low
Final comment	The setup will require heat blower from MCX, otherwise standard setup. Time seems adequate. --- the scientific topic is sufficiently clear and the proposer has adequately motivated the project and the experimental plan. There may be concerns regarding the use of relatively low energy (20KeV) given the heavy elements (high Z) in the samples, which may result in relatively high absorption effects even with a 0.1 mm capillary. Maybe higher energy set-up on other SR facilities could be more appropriate. - Clear proposal, which follows recent syntheses and characterisation of a suite of lanthanide TTb MFs. Straight-forward, apparently feasible, but this reviewer has some hesitation about Z at 20 keV (cf '..small absorption!'). Would help to know what is required of the instrument resolution-wise (and intensity-wise) to properly characterise the ordering, bar the generic bullets indicated.

Abstract

Sanskrit was considered as 'DEV BHASHA' or 'DEVAVANI', the Language of the Gods by ancient Indians. The script is called DEVNAGARI which means used in the cities of the Gods. It was believed to have been generated by the god Brahma who passed it to the Rishis (sages) living in celestial abodes, who then communicated the same to their earthly disciples from where it spread on earth.

Sanskrit is believed to be one of the oldest languages in the world. The Vedas, oldest extant texts in any language, were written in Sanskrit. The earliest form of Sanskrit language was Vedic Sanskrit that came approximately around 1500B.C, a period when knowledge was imparted orally through generations.

An old, yet, a highly technical, systematic language of the world. Following research, a report given by the NASA scientist, Rick vedas, Sanskrit is one of the most suitable languages for the computers. It is considered to be very efficient in making algorithms.
